It appears however that she municipal law requires time to take root in the was subsequently erdered to this port intending to meet the sentiments and customs of a people. Laws in fact do not make the people, but the people make the laws, which are the outgrowth and The Cents Rice got off at 12:30 on Saturday, with a cargo expression of the opinions and habits of the community. This view was in the mind of Fletcher of Saltoun, when he said, " If a man were permitted to make all the ballads, he need not care who should make the laws of a nation. In these islands we have the singular example of a foreign system of law imported in a body. when the people were able to feel its necessity but not its significance. This measure was required by the interests of foreigners domiciled here, and also as a means of preserving national sovereignty among civilized nations. Were it not for this guaranty of individual rights, the right of foreign powers to dictate and control here would be measured only by their desire to

We have adopted a Constitution modeled largely on that of the United States, with statutes and rules of judicature nearly identical with those of that country and England. But we are without the substratum, or "hard pan" either of English or American law, as a point of departure. Our Penal Code is supposed to specify all the offences known to our law, which is a great gain on the system that prevails under the English Common Law, where even the Courts are often unable to agree on what acts constitute an offence. This is as bad as the Edicts of Caligula, placed so high that no one could read them. But we have yet something to do in making our law simple, certain and easy to ascertain. It is true that a large body of law, relating to matters like the construction of wills. statutes, and contracts, rules of evidence and of equity, and matters of practice, cannot be codified. but must be determined by judicial knowledge, sagacity and experience. We owe it however to the native race on whom this system is imposed, as well as to foreigners domiciled here, to reduce our laws to the greatest possible simplicity and certainty consistent with the needs of justice, and to leave no unnecessary margin for the doubtful influence of judicial legislation, evolved from the inner consciousness of judges.

The records show that a large part of our judicial work consists of probate business, to settle the estates of deceased persons. Most of these cases, among the natives, are solely for the purpose of ascertaining the heirs of kuleanas of land. In probate law, our statutes are strangely insufficient, and the practice of the various Courts is needlessly lacking in uniformity and certainty. It is well known that notwithstanding the recent date of our original land tenures, it is almost impossible to find how far titles are at any time affected by probate decrees. To illustrate these remarks, take any ordinary native case in probate, with no debts to pay or collect, and merely REPORT OF BANK ONWARD, HAVES, MASTER.-Sailed from a decree of heirsbip wanted.
